Locates absent parents, establishes and enforces the amount of support, and collects and disburses payments, Any

Virginia parent with physical and legal custody of a child needing support can apply for assistance. The applicant will be asked to supply information which will help locate the absent parent. There is no charge to the applicant. All child support which the state collects goes directly to the custodial parent. Child support payments may reduce the amount of ADC assistance a family receives. Child support currently ends when the child reaches 18, but this may be extended to 19 if the child is still in high school. The Division has many ways to collect: garnish wages, intercept state and federal tax refunds, put liens on property and tie up assets (such as bank accounts). In some cases, the state will prosecute. You may also get court-ordered child support for your children by going to the Juvenile and Domestic Relations District Court Intake Unit in the city in county where the children live. If the absent parent lives out of state, call the toll free number (within Virginia) to obtain information about the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA)/Interstate child support enforcement process.
